About Me

I believe that great interior design is a collaborative effort between designer and client, which starts by carefully listening to every client to understand their goals. I focus on using software to allow clients to get a feel for what the final design would look like early in the process and use an iterative approach to converge on a final design which is functional yet beautiful.

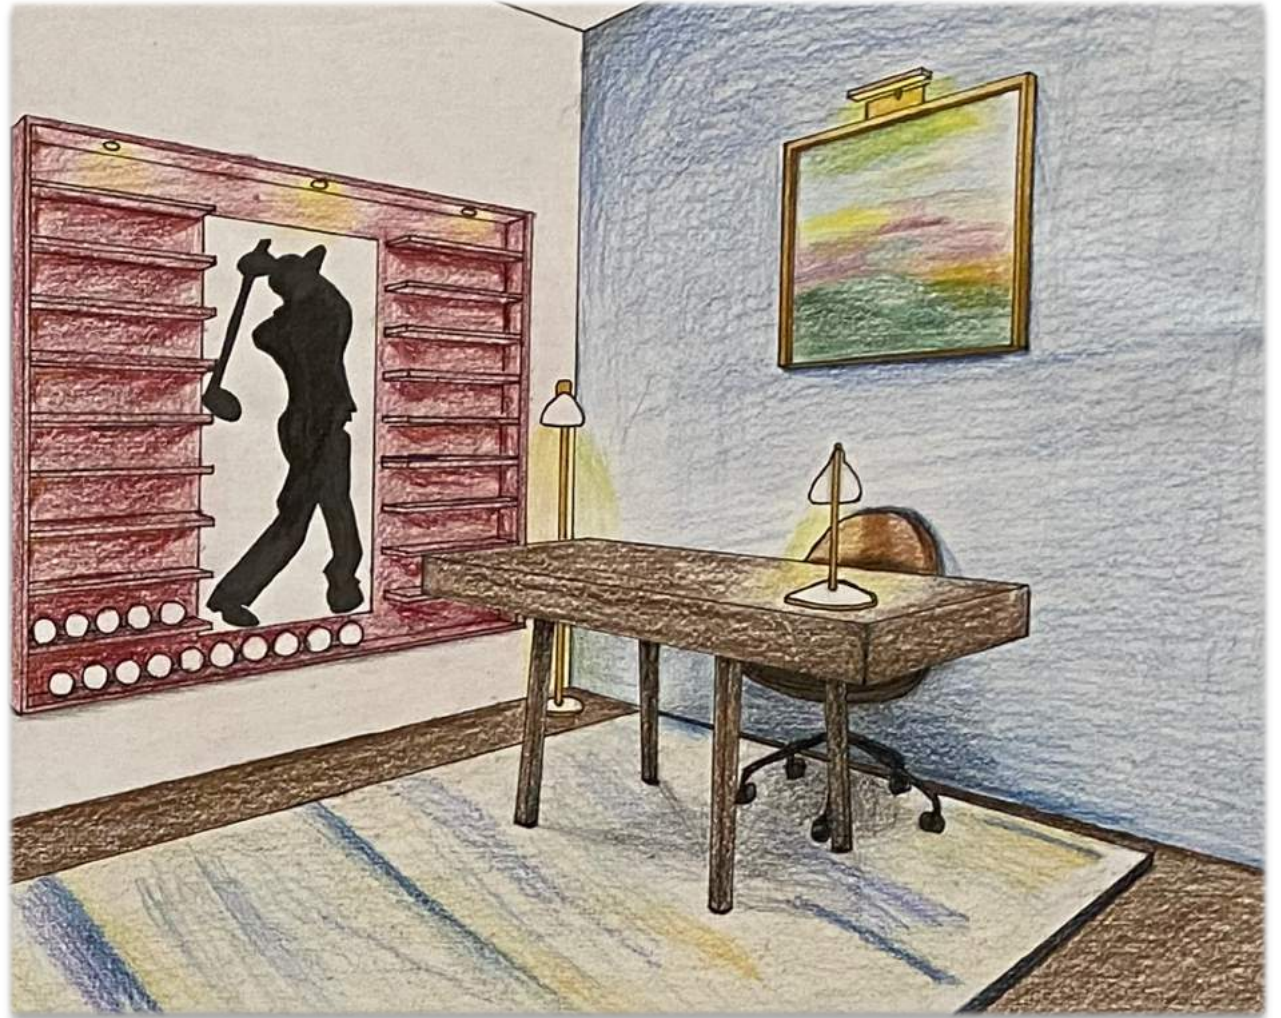

I studied Interior Design at the Heritage School of Interior Design in Seattle and completed an undergrad in Interactive Media Design. Previously I worked for several years as a product coordinator overseeing the design and manufacturing of seasonal decorations, which provided me with important experience in overseeing complex projects and coordinating with multiple vendors to keep projects on track.

Material board

A modern interior design rendering of a study or office space. The room features a large window with a black frame and white blinds, offering a view of a green landscape. A wooden desk with a white lamp is positioned against a dark blue textured wall. A white armchair is visible near the window. A large abstract painting is mounted on the wall, and a modern chandelier hangs from the ceiling.
